

Being small...

...often has great advantages!

In 1951 St. Louis Browns pinch hitter Eddie Gaedel came up to bat against the Detroit Tigers in a critical game. Gaedel was only 3'7", but in spite of his size, he did the one thing his team needed from him that day: He got a base on balls that helped win the game.

In the world of consulting firms, we're pretty small. But like Eddie Gaedel, we use size to our advantage. We're small enough that you'll get our undivided attention, and you'll only work with our principals.

You're not going to get huge, dense studies. We roll up our sleeves and figure out how to help you grow your revenues, control costs, and better manage risk. We'll show you very specific things you can start doing right away to improve your profitability.

We may be small, but we're a big hit with our clients. Being small can often work to your advantage.
